The LHCb experiment has reported a significant structure in invariant mass distribution of promptly produced J/psi J/psi combinations, with a peak at 6.9 GeV, which is a good tetraquark candidate. I will discuss this discovery in a broader context of tetraquark and pentaquark candidates observed by the LHCb and other experiments.